

Dear Admission Committee,

RE: RECOMMENDATION LETTER FOR BRIAN TIMAYO PARSOMOI, PF
54004

Brian is a scholar from the Equity Leadership Program (ELP) under Equity Bank Limited. The program admits top national performers in the Kenya Certificate of Secondary Education and equips them with skills for social and career success through mentorship and internship. I have known Brian for the past nine months as his supervisor during his internship at Equity Bank, Kiserian branch.

Brian was exceptionally quick to learn. Interns typically require up to a month of supervision before working independently, but by the end of his first week, I trusted Brian to attend to customers on his own – the earliest I have ever done so. His rapid adaptation stemmed from his inquisitive nature, relentless curiosity, and confidence in his abilities. He always wanted to know how every bank system worked to the fullest. I remember one time we had a new system introduced to our branch and we had no trainer coming soon yet we had to use it. Brian, however, exploited it on his own and learned how to operate it. It was from him that all the other employees learned how to navigate through.

Brian was remarkably punctual, consistently arriving first at the bank despite living furthest. Initially, I assumed it was a bid to give a good first impression, but his consistency proved otherwise. His reliability gave me peace of mind knowing everything would be ready before I arrived. This earned him recognition from the branch manager, who would always find Brian already settled in with a fully arranged and neat desk. She often encouraged staff members during meetings to emulate Brian's discipline as he would also leave late for work while attending to customer requests and complaints.

From the start, Brian showed strong leadership potential. Despite his age, he organized older employees during customer experience trainings and became the first intern to ever lead such sessions. I used to lead the sessions before I fell sick and had to take a leave. When I came back, Brian had taken over and was surprisingly even better than me. He chaired these intense debates with calm authority and sound judgement. His cheerful nature also brought life to these trainings by making them more fun and engaging making them very effective as it was seen in drastic improvements in customer handling by employees at the bank.

Brian's dedication to his work was unmatched. He did not wait for customers to approach – he engaged them proactively, identified their needs, and resolved issues diligently. He often skipped meals to ensure customers were served. When asked for directions, he did not just point – he personally escorted customers to their destination. This commitment saw his department consistently receiving top customer ratings since his arrival, motivating others to raise their performance to match his.

Whenever a department faced a gap – due to leave or other reasons – Brian stepped in without being asked. His helpfulness extended beyond his role. He saw these moments as learning opportunities and embraced them wholeheartedly. Staff knew they could always count on him. He was the most approachable and friendly employee which made most colleagues to prefer requesting help from him. He even once stepped in for the kitchen lady something I have never witnessed.

My experience with Brian stands out among all interns I have ever supervised. His departure left a noticeable void, a testament to the impact he made. I wholeheartedly recommend him with confidence that he will make an impactful difference too in your institution.

Yours faithfully,

Loise Mwangi
Customer Care Supervisor,
Equity Bank, Kiserian Branch.
